The rise of the Canadian software acquirer

Canada has long had a strong technology market. Until recently, however, many Canadian software companies have maintained the reputation of growing to a certain size before being swallowed up by a strategic acquirer in the US or globally. While we grew accustomed to press releases stating, “Canadian software company X was acquired by international buyer Y” over the years, the script was flipped in 2021. What we saw in 2021 was a clear emergence of Canadian software companies as acquirers, both of other Canadian companies and companies globally.

BREAKING DOWN THE NUMBERS

The numbers are clear: Canadian software companies made 284 acquisitions in 2021. That is a 90% increase over the average of the previous four years. Of these deals, 40% were acquisitions of other Canadian companies. This is still a big percentage of the total share of deals, but it has been on a decline over the last several years as Canadian software companies have been making more global acquisitions.

The data suggests that this trend extends beyond North America. Canadian software companies’ acquisitions of companies outside North America have grown from 18% to 27% of all acquisitions over the last five years.

The last noteworthy point is a clear rise in the percentage of investors who have made more than one acquisition in the year. Therefore, this is not an anomaly: M&A is central to these companies’ strategies.

WHAT COULD BE DRIVING THIS?

The first indication of what might be driving this is revealed by looking at the acquirers’ profiles. There is a significant rise in the number of acquirers who are VC backed, while the number of PE-backed acquirers has stayed relatively flat over the last five years. This is not surprising, given there have been more venture capital deals for Canadian software companies, including some very large raises that would support a more aggressive M&A strategy. This venture funding both empowers these companies to make acquisitions and provides an alternative route to being acquired prior to scaling.

The other potential driver here is Canada’s growing technology talent pool. Toronto was recently declared the third-largest talent hub in North America. Bootstrapped companies often see talent as a constraint. While strong technology talent is a scarce resource for most companies, Canadian companies may have better access to these resources in their own markets. This means they won’t need to be acquired to access talent. Startups in other geographies may find this an attractive trait in an acquirer.

WHAT COULD THIS MEAN FOR CANADIAN COMPANIES?

From this data, it seems clear that Canada’s reputation in the global technology landscape is growing. Canadian technology companies are able to execute deals on their own or get backing to support their acquisitions through venture capital. If you are a target, there is an increasing number of options to sell your business within Canada, which may be attractive to you and your employees.

In the long run, more companies remaining headquartered in Canada is positive for the Canadian technology ecosystem. It will be interesting to observe more software companies turn to M&A to be able to support ambitious growth objectives in the coming years. We will continue to monitor these trends as Canadian acquirers continue to grow and consolidate.

EY Transaction Snapshot

EY advised Verdazo Analytics Inc.

("Verdazo") on its sale to Vela Software International Inc. ("Vela"), a subsidiary of Constellation Software Inc. ("Constellation").

EY acted as the exclusive financial advisor to Verdazo and led all portions of the process, applying our strong sector knowledge and transaction experience to help achieve a positive outcome for Verdazo.

About Verdazo

Verdazo provides a leading business intelligence analytics software tool for the oil and gas industry. The company was founded in 2006 and rebranded as Verdazo in 2016. The Verdazo software platform provides users with the ability to analyze data across several datasets allowing a range of clients to monitor production and various KPIs, capital spending and financial performance to target efficiencies, reduce costs and optimize performance.

About Vela

Vela is a subsidiary of Constellation, a TSX-listed publicly traded company that operates in over 100 countries and across dozens of verticals. Constellation has completed over 500 acquisitions of small, medium and large private and public companies since its inception in 1995.

The win-win

The acquisition will allow Vela to integrate the Verdazo solution with other complimentary businesses to leverage the unique capabilities of the Verdazo team and technology for growth and expansion.
